Cartus Invites Multinational Firms to Participate in Upcoming Global Relocation Trends Survey

DANBURY, Conn., (August 18, 2014) – Cartus Corporation, a leading provider of global relocation services, is inviting multinational corporations to participate in its upcoming Biggest Challenges Survey, one of the industry's most recognized research tools that delves deeply into relocation practices, policies, and mobility trends.

The 2014 research survey, which is open to all human resources, mobility, and relocation professionals, will cover a number of areas, including:

What are the biggest challenges companies and their relocating employees face today?

How do they compare to the problems experienced by other companies?

What steps are companies taking to implement unique solutions that work for them in different parts of the world?

What hot topics and trends are companies seeing in their relocation programs?

This is the 4th annual Biggest Challenges Survey from Cartus. The geographical focus of this survey provides useful perspectives on the challenges companies face by location and how those strategies differ from one region to the next.

Through their participation, companies will help to continue uncovering key trends that shape international mobility. Survey respondents' information is kept confidential.

Respondents' input will contribute to a more robust and accurate set of findings which, in turn, will provide a more detailed view of global differences and even suggest potential action steps to make relocation programs more effective around the globe.

The survey will remain open until September 5th and can be taken here.
